I've also started to think about a potential project. Definitely still thinking about what exactly I want to do, but chatting with Amanda gave me lots of ideas and things to think about. I definitely wanted to do something with ithr digital humanities or education, but I never thought to combine the two. Definitely leaning towards either a lesson plan (although to be quite honey I'm getting sick and tired of writing formal lesson plans LOL) or some sort resource. I might even be able to tie whatever I'm doing into one of my student teaching unit plans -- I'll be doing imperialism and actually idr go check, so I'm trying to think about what I could do that would go along with that. Maybe coming up with an interactive map or timeline as an assessment? I'll need to think about it and talk with my cooperating teacher some more. I'm gonna stop myself before I go into a rant about standardized testing, but I'm definitely more limited in my high school placement because the students have to either take an AP exam or the Regents exam, which I didn't even worry about in middle school. Some sort of website could be sick too.

I'm also glad to finally have Github all set up on my computer! It still honestly scares me a little bit, but now that I got the key set up with minimal issues, I'm a bit more confident that I'll eventually be able to figure out how to use it :) I've also gotten a lot more comfortable with editing text in VS, as I've been playing around with it a bit.